Building Hope:

ADVANCING CANCER CARE FOR OUR COMMUNITY

Ongoing construction of the Carilion Taubman Cancer Center.

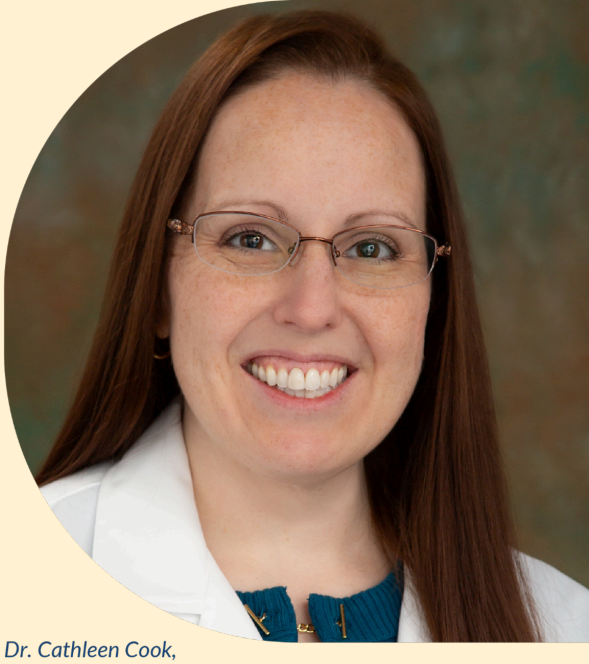

On Time, On Purpose: Inside the Construction of the Carilion Taubman Cancer Center

"Construction is on time." Few sentences mean more on a multimillion-dollar build, and senior project manager Todd Peters says it without hesitation. As the Carilion Taubman Cancer Center moves from structural work to exterior walls, Peters says the whole team is focused on what the building means for Southwest Virginia. With the first patient expected in 2028, we are not far away from opening day.

The Promise of Proton Therapy

"I would compare traditional photon radiation to a flashlight and proton radiation to a laser pointer," says Dr. Cathleen Cook, a pediatric hematologist-oncologist at Carilion Clinic. For her young patients, that precision could mean fewer long-term side effects and more birthdays, milestones, and ordinary kid moments. Dr. Cook believes proton therapy at the Carilion Taubman Cancer Center will let families stay close to home during treatment.

Annie B. Agee: The Treatment That Changed Her Life

At 25, Annie B. Agee had run a mile every day for more than 1,000 days straight, even as she quietly dealt with months of numbness in her back. An ER visit led to a shocking discovery: a rare tumor at the base of her neck. Proton therapy saved her life and protected the nerves and organs closest to it. Five years later, Annie is cancer-free, married, and finishing medical school. She hopes the Carilion Taubman Cancer Center will spare other families the six weeks she spent away from home for treatment.

A Million Dollar Commitment to Children's Care

For more than 40 years, the Arrington family has rounded up change for Children's Miracle Network. The tradition started with their grandfather's first Dairy Queen in the 1980s. Now, Arrington Management Group is pledging $1 million over 6 years, building on a Round Up campaign that already ranks No. 2 nationally. "We have a semiannual visit to Carilion Children's Hospital with our management team, and that's been a huge motivator to actually see where the money goes," says VP Brian Arrington. Their challenge to other businesses?
